

NATIONAL SEPTEMBER 11 MEMORIAL & MUSEUM

A place to remember.

Two quiet pools. Thousands of names.
A story carried forward by people.

At the footprints of the Twin Towers, water falls into a space that has no visible bottom.

A LIVING LANDSCAPE

Where the towers stood, water keeps falling.

The Memorial is an open, tree-shaded place for remembrance at the World Trade Center site. Its two great pools trace the footprints of the Twin Towers.

2,977

people killed in the attacks of
September 11, 2001

Also remembered: the six people killed in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing.

Nearly 3,000 names are cut into bronze around the pools. They are not a list to hurry through: pause, find a name, notice the people beside it. The arrangement reflects real relationships and connections.

Water descends along the pool walls toward a central opening. Around them, a grove of oaks offers shade and a softer boundary with the city beyond.

A LIVING REMINDER

The Survivor Tree

Damaged on 9/11, it was cared for and returned to the site. Today it stands for resilience and recovery.

A moment of remembrance at the Memorial. U.S. Navy photograph by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Sarah Villegas.

BELOW THE PLAZA

A history told through human lives.

The Museum examines September 11 at the site where the Twin Towers once stood, bringing the events and their human consequences into view.

Its architecture, archaeology and history meet in galleries shaped by the site itself. The experience moves from the events of the day to the people who lived through them, the response that followed and the lasting effects on families, communities and the world.

Rather than asking visitors to take in everything at once, the Museum brings together objects, images, first-person accounts and interactive media. Each offers a different way into a history that is both national and deeply personal.

A STORY IN LAYERS

One day. Many lived experiences.

The Museum combines personal testimony with the physical traces of the site. Together they make room for both the scale of the events and the singularity of each life.

01 Before

Encounter the World Trade Center as a place of work and daily life, and the events that preceded September 11.

02 September 11

Follow the events through objects, photographs, recorded voices and accounts from people who were there.

03 After

Consider rescue and recovery, rebuilding, and the consequences that continue to shape lives and communities.

LOOK FOR

Large pieces of the original site sit alongside small, everyday belongings. Their different scales help bring the history close without reducing it to a single story.

THE COLLECTION

Evidence of a place. Echoes of a person.

FDNY Ladder 3 was recovered from the World Trade Center site after September 11. Museum collection.

A

Monumental remains

Fragments of the site and the work of rescue make the scale of the place tangible.

B

Everyday things

Personal objects and records connect the history to particular people, routines and relationships interrupted by the attacks.

C

Voices and images

Recorded testimony, photographs and film document what people saw, heard and remember, in their own words.

D

The place itself

Architecture and preserved elements of the site form part of the exhibition, grounding the story in where it happened.

Notice what changes when a number becomes a name, or an object becomes someone's keepsake.

THE MUSEUM'S PURPOSE

To remember. To understand. To carry forward.

The Memorial & Museum honors those killed, recognizes those who survived, and pays tribute to the people who risked their lives to help others.

It preserves testimony and material evidence so the history can be examined—not only recalled. Visitors encounter courage and loss, but also the bonds between people, the work of rescue and recovery, and the many ways a community responds.

The institution asks us to look closely, listen carefully and make room for experiences different from our own. Understanding the past can deepen our care for one another in the present.

“A monument to human dignity, courage, and sacrifice.”

— The 9/11 Memorial & Museum

There is no required feeling or conclusion. Take a break when you need one; return to the story when you are ready.

A FEW PRACTICAL DETAILS

Make room for the visit.

THE MEMORIAL	Free and open daily, 8 a.m.–8 p.m.
THE MUSEUM	Wednesday–Monday, 9 a.m.–7 p.m.; select Tuesdays. Last entry is 5:30 p.m. Advance tickets are required.
TIME INSIDE	The Museum recommends allowing at least 45–90 minutes. Many visitors choose to stay longer.
AUDIO GUIDES	Available in nine languages, including American Sign Language.
ADDRESS	180 Greenwich Street New York, NY 10007

Before setting out

Hours, ticket availability and access can change. Confirm current details, transit directions and accessibility resources at 911memorial.org/visit.

Visitor information checked October 8, 2026. Memorial and Museum are separate experiences; Museum admission is ticketed.

NATIONAL SEPTEMBER 11 MEMORIAL & MUSEUM

The names remain. The stories continue.

At the World Trade Center site in New York City.

IMAGE CREDITS

Pool: Ken Lund, “National September 11 Memorial,” CC BY-SA 2.0, via Wikimedia Commons. Tree: PumpkinSky, “Survivor Tree at the National September 11 Memorial: Old and New Growth,” CC BY-SA 3.0, via Wikimedia Commons.

Ladder 3: Alberto-g-rovì, “Museo y Memorial 9-11-2023 02,” CC BY 3.0, via Wikimedia Commons. Memorial visit: U.S. Navy photo by Mass Communication Specialist 1st Class Sarah Villegas; public domain.

SOURCES & UPDATES

Visitor and mission information: 911memorial.org/visit and 911memorial.org/visit/museum. Check the official site for current schedules and exhibition details.

Independent visitor guide; not an official Museum publication. October 2026.